LONDON, May 25.
We are assured that the reason of the right hon. William Pitt, Esq. refusing to come into the administration again, is, on account of his uncertain state of health.

His Majesty came from Richmond to St. James's, on Saturday about half an hour past eleven; and a little after twelve went to the House of Peers, with the usual state, attended by the Duke of Richmond, where, after giving the royal assent to such bills as were ready, made the following most gracious speech.

My Lords and Gentlemen,
THE dispatch which you have given with so much zeal and wisdom to the public business, enables me now to put a period to this session of parliament.
No alteration in the state of foreign affairs has happened since your meeting, to disturb the general peace; and it is with pleasure that I inform you, that the present disposition of the several powers of Europe promise the continuance of this blessing.
I have seen, with the most perfect approbation, that you have employed this season of tranquillity in promoting those objects, which I had recommended to your attention, and in framing such regulations as may best enforce the just authority of the law, and at the same time secure and extend the commerce, and unite the interest of every part of my dominions.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons,
The cheerfulness and prudence which you have shewn in providing for the necessary expenses of the present year, deserves my particular acknowledgments. The many bills which you have formed for the improvement and augmentation of the revenue in its several branches, and the early care you have taken to discharge a part of the national debt, are the most effectual methods to establish the public credit upon the surest foundation, and to alleviate, by degrees, the burthen of my people.
My Lords and Gentlemen,
The provisions which you have made for the administration of the government, in case the crown should descend to any of my children under the age of eighteen years, whilst they add strength and security to our present establishment, give the kindest and most convincing proof of your confidence: The sense which I have of the important trust reposed in me, and my desire to repay this mark of your affection, by discharging my part agreeable to your intentions, in the manner most beneficial to my people, have concurred to make me execute, without delay, the powers with which you have entrusted me.
This has been already done; and you may be assured, that as far as it depends upon me, those salutary provisions, shall never be ineffectual. It is my ardent wish, and shall be my constant endeavour, on this, and every other occasion, to perpetuate the happiness of my subjects, and to transmit to posterity the blessings of our invaluable constitution.

Both houses of parliament were prorogued on Saturday last to Thursday the 11th day of July next.
